Brief

Hurst was appointed to deliver bespoke joinery and tiling packages as part of the transformation of an existing building into over 30,000 sqft of high specification, Grade A serviced office space.

This marked the third collaboration between Hurst Joinery Projects and the HACS Group, following successful projects at Yorkshire Cancer Research and the Police Treatment Centre.

Result

Hurst's responsiveness and reliability, during both manufacture and installation, ensured the joinery was delivered in line with the client's programme and high design standards. The joinery elements contributed significantly to the overall finish and character of the space, while the premium tiling works complemented these features to create a cohesive and polished interior.

The client was extremely satisfied with the end result, praising Hurst's expertise, quality of product and collaborative approach throughout the process.

Challenges

Hurst were tasked with delivering bespoke joinery across multiple floors, with each space serving a different function and requiring its own design approach. A high standard of finish had to be maintained across all areas of the building.

Installation required thorough planning and flexibility to coordinate effectively with other trades. Due to the site's location off a busy main road, deliveries were carefully managed to limit disruption.

Solution

Hurst worked closely with the client and design team from the early stages, providing technical input and design expertise throughout the tender and scheme development process.

Joinery elements, including wall panelling, cupboards, banquette seating, teapoints and planters were designed to enhance the reception, communal areas, boardrooms and co-working spaces, combining style with practical functionality.

Alongside this, Hurst's tiling division delivered high-quality finishes to the reception, lift lobbies, kitchen areas, washrooms and external entrance, ensuring the interiors were not only visually striking but also durable and practical for everyday use.

Hurst Joinery Projects were a pleasure to work with, from design to delivery. The team were responsive and accommodating during the tender process, and their expert knowledge provided reassurance on the wider scheme. During installation, the site teams were reliable and attended as per the agreed programme. The joinery was delivered to a very high standard. We look forward to working with Hurst again on future projects.”
